700 AMERICAN ANTHROPOLOGIST VOLUME 113 INDEX

ON THE COVER: Manuel Segovia Jiménez is one of the last remaining speakers of an indigenous Mexican language called Ayapaneco. He is pictured here preparing a vocabulary lesson for a group of students who will come to his house later that evening. The state of Tabasco has declared don Manuel to be a “guardian of Tabascan tradition,” and it pays him a small monthly stipend to participate in cultural festivals and teach his language to members of his community. Don Manuel’s story is explored in Daniel Suslak’s article, “Ayapan Echoes: Linguistic Persistence and Loss in Tabasco, Mexico” (this issue). (Photograph taken by Daniel Suslak on August 21, 2008.)
